Abstract

The displacement and changes in the faculty workload can be associated with different factors particularly due to the birth of a new and innovative education system (Winkler, 1992). The sudden shift in the K to 12 Program has led universities and other academic institutions to adapt to the changes and be able to develop an effective and challenging environment to the students. The study aimed to determine the limited displacement of LCUP personnel in relation to their workloads through the use of a descriptive design. Based from the data being gathered from the five departments, the result showed a significant difference from the workloads of the first semester last School Year 2015-2016 and the first semester in the School Year 2016-2017.
